remarks touching the prospects of infla-"There are stories floating around the street, which to some extent are austained by the course of the market for the past few days, to the effect that there is a scheme on foot originated by some of the hrewd operators and heavy capitalists of Wall street, who are in league with very high officials in Washington, if not with Congress itself, to depress the stock market temporarily in order to take full advantage of whatever benefit may be derived from the final action of Congress in the way of inflating the currency. Those who claim, and perhaps with good reason, to understand the store of the delivery of the condensation of the currency. to understand the views of the Adminis tration, appear to be entirely confident that inflation is a forgone conclusion, and that the positive demonstration of that policy is only a matter of time. They policy is only a matter of time. They claim that both financially and politically expansion is a necessity, for the reasons that the present system of taxation, as business runs, will not furnish an adequate revenue to meet the requirements of the Treasury; that the party in power fear the political effect of adultional tax. fear the political effect of additional tax ation, and that they feel the necessity of sustaining the Secretary of the Treasury in his unauthorized issue of what he calls his $44,000,000 reserve."

MR. WALKER'S paper, the Charleston Courier, deprecates any agitation of the Capital question, and concludes a review of the agitations that have taken place at one time and another in Virginia in favor of the removal of the Capital from Richmond to some other point, with the fol-

"Capital removals is not one of the faults of the Virginians, and some of her neighbors might learn the lesson to advantage."

The neighbor referred to is the sovereign State of West Virginia we presume. But what does Mr. WALKER do with the tact that the Capital of Virginia was once at Williamsburg, and was removed from that place to Richmond because of the greater importance of the latter and its accessibility to a greater number of people. And what would be thought now-a-days of the removal of the capital of Virginia from Rtehmond back to a place like Williams-burg? And yet would it look much more ridiculous than did the removal of the Capital of West Virginia from Wheeling Capital of West Virginia from Wheeling Pears in excellent condition. There is no question but that the statements made thus far have convinced the Committee of the serious losses and other wrongs to which the merchants have unpecessarily been subjected by the other wrongs to which the merchants have unnecessarily been subjected by the Government officers in the seizure of books and papers, and therefore it can reasonably be expected that if the Committee shall not report a bill to repeal that provision of the law, they will suggest such an amendment as will render it less injurious to the current band less injurious to the current busi-ness of merchants who may have fallen under suspicion of the Treasury agents and their deputies, and all other informers and spies.
